Collective answers to most common questions/concerns regarding multiple choice exams.

1. What to do if the e-class crashes during exam?

No student will receive an F due to total e-class software failure. After exam time is up, 2 options will be considered depending on when and for how long the e-class was out.

Option 1 Grades will be assigned based on the answers recorded before the software crashed

Option 2 New exam will be set up on a different day/time

2. What happens if I have a panic attack during exam or I am in mental distress?

Relax, you will not get an F, see if you can overcome it, if not, send me email immediately after the exam (DO NOT wait) with short explanation what happened. Take care of your health, do what it takes to get better, once you are well, we will find a solution. Every case is different and will be evaluated separately.

3. What to do if I lose my internet connection, computer crashes, or power goes out during the exam? As soon as you can send me email, every case is different and will be evaluated separately.

4. What to do if I accidentally exit full screen or pop up window opens automatically during the exam? DO NOT stop the exam, DO NOT email me during the exam. Immediately go back to full screen/close pop up window. You DO NOT need to report this to me (I will see it automatically). If it was just for few seconds it is NOT a problem, when it happens multiple times or for long time that will be problematic and will be considered as cheating.

5. Can you give us more time on multiple choice exam?

In short no, but I have tested this type of exam twice (in 100 –level class), and in both cases most students finished in 18 minutes, or under. Out of over 200 students that took this type of exam not a single student run out of time. Therefore, I am confident that 30 minutes is more than enough (questions are very short - one line only). However, sometimes (depending on the speed of internet connection) there was a short delay in transition from one question to the next. Therefore, I am adding 5 minutes to the exam time to compensate for potential delays/glitches. Thus, the exam time in this class will be 35 minutes not 30.

6. Can I use my class notes during multiple choice exam?

Certainly NOT, it is ‘closed book’ exam (please listen to the review lecture carefully).

Few small glitches were reported with the online exam in the other class, so I want to share this information with you as well:

1. Apparently sometimes the exam will not open in full screen automatically, if that is the case you can hit F11 key on your keyboard and this should take you to full screen.

2. In some cases the software would select the same question twice, if that happens just select the correct answer twice (you will receive points for both answers/questions even if they were identical).

3. At times question text would appear in blue and sometimes in black, this is another glitch with the system, it has no impact on the actual meaning of the question just color of the text.
